☉ Mayor's Design Awards

And the winner is...

Mayor John Hickenlooper celebrated the growing number of Denver's business owners and developers who have made design excellence a priority in their community. "Great cities are just as enriched by many small and beautiful design interventions as they are by large and bold civic gestures," said Mayor Hickenlooper.

"The Mayor's Design Awards recognizes and encourages well designed small projects throughout our neighborhoods," said Denver Planning Manager Peter J. Park, AICP. "Good design happens on its own when enlightened owners recognize the benefit and invest in quality design

"The business owners we recognize didn't have to go the extra mile to invest time and money in their property. But because they did, we all can benefit from it. They are helping to create a culture of good design in our city and encouraging other business owners to follow suit," said Mayor Hickenlooper

The 2005 Mayor's Design Awards showcase 15 different projects that embody various elements of design excellence. These projects include retail stores, an urban market, an apartment, an annual children's event and even a magazine. Their design efforts make our city interesting, provocative and memorable.
